

School-based health care support toolkit: Information on Ohio FQHCs

Ohio | Governor's Office of Health Transformation

Further details on the benefits of partnering with Federally Qualified Health Centers (FQHCs)

Opportunity to build and grow community partnership

With the experience FQHCs have in serving the greater community, it becomes easier to have impact on patients ranging from students to adults and build trust quickly

Partnering with high-need schools gives FQHCs the opportunity to build new relationships with young Medicaid-enrolled patients and fits within their mission to serve the highest need populations

Conducive model for treating in high need areas

FQHCs have experience working with a high rate of patients on Medicaid and treating patients for mental and behavioral health issues

FQHCs earn an extra prospective payment for treating patients on Medicaid – this makes the school-based model more sustainable and likely to persist

Improves access to and compliance with treatment

School-based health care models often have difficulties setting up care outside of school hours – FQHCs allow for access to service in non-standard hours for a wider range of services than available at school

High Medicaid-enrolled populations often have lower appointment attendance and treatment compliance rates – seeing students consistently in school has been associated with improving both of those metrics

As schools are considering a partner provider for school-based health care, they should look to see if there is a Federally Qualified Health Center (FQHC) in the county (full list in this chapter)
