Introduction to Ohio’s Learning Standards for World Languages and Cultures

In 2020, the State Board of Education adopted the latest revision of Ohio’s Learning Standards for World Languages and Cultures. The standards describe what learners should know and be able to do as they build proficiency in the languages they are learning. The standards also provide a foundation for an aligned system designed to improve achievement by raising language proficiency and interculturality. Ultimately, they help ensure learners are well-positioned for success in college and careers in a globally interdependent world upon completion of their K-12 education.

World language specialists in the Ohio Department of Education’s Office of Learning and Instructional Strategies facilitated the revision process by engaging diverse stakeholders, soliciting and incorporating a wide range of ideas and viewpoints into numerous drafts, and analyzing and incorporating feedback provided by online reviewers from all over the state. A transparent process was used to ensure active, statewide participation throughout the project’s yearlong timeline.

The process used to revise the world language standards, as established by the Ohio Department of Education, continued to incorporate an element of national and international benchmarking to ensure Ohio’s standards take into consideration the best research and practices, as well as trends affecting the field. With these requirements in mind, Ohio’s new world language learning standards embed the following criteria:

- Align with the national World Readiness Standards for Learning Languages (2015) of the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Language (ACTFL);
- Consider the findings of the 2011 national standards impact study titled “National Foreign Language Standards: Impact and Influence After a Decade Plus”;
- Align with the ACTFL Proficiency Guidelines (2012), and ACTFL Performance Descriptors for Language Learners (2012);
- Connect to key elements of the 21st Century Skills Map (2011) by ACTFL;
- Align with the English Language Arts Literacy Standards;
- Integrate the NCSSFL-ACTFL Can-Do Statements for Communication and Intercultural Competence (2017) created by the National Council of State Supervisors for Languages (NCSSFL) in partnership with ACTFL;
- Are internationally benchmarked against the Common European Framework of Reference (CEFRL).

These standards continue to align with the national World Readiness Standards for Learning Languages (2015) and the world language standards of nearly every other state in the country. It is important to mention this document continues to fully integrate the well-known Connections, Comparisons and Communities goal areas contained in the national standards. Public feedback continues to support the interweaving of these goal areas within the foundational framework of the Cultures and Communication goals. They have been integrated throughout the benchmarks and learning standards and provide a considerable portion of the foundation for both the Cultures and Communication goals. K-12 language educators should continue to connect their learners to other disciplines to acquire information and diverse perspectives, create opportunities for learners to make linguistic and cultural comparisons and facilitate contact with target language communities where learners can participate using their communication and intercultural skills.

The adoption of these new learning standards fulfills a requirement of Ohio law (Ohio Revised Code 3311.079), which requires the periodic revision of the Ohio learning standards for grades K-12 in world (foreign) language. The law also specifies that the Department of Education revise the model curriculum to provide world language educators with updated support for implementing the revised learning standards. The revised model curriculum will continue to provide high-quality standards-based resources, tools and guidance for teachers to use in planning standards- and proficiency-based instruction and developing local performance assessments.

KEY DESIGN CONSIDERATIONS

Ohio’s revised Learning Standards for World Languages and Cultures represent a research-supported approach to language learning that prepares learners to use their language proficiency and intercultural competence to participate effectively in a global society. The standards embrace a communicative and proficiency-based approach to teaching and learning a world language that is well-supported by decades of research. Their implementation in world language programs around Ohio will help prepare learners to be successful in both college and the workplace.

The most notable change in the new standards document is the inclusion of proficiency levels in addition to grade bands. This clearly defines learning outcomes across the first seven sublevels of proficiency as defined by the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages: Novice Low, Novice Mid, Novice High, Intermediate Low, Intermediate Mid, Intermediate High and Advanced Low. This emphasizes developing language proficiency regardless of the grade level at which the language is learned.

The standards also change the order in which the learning end goals are presented, with Cultures preceding Communication. Placing the Cultures standards in the first position sends a clear message to Ohio educators that the study of culture is equal to language study. To achieve high levels of proficiency in another language, learners must simultaneously develop their intercultural competence and communicative proficiency.

The revised Cultures goal continues to incorporate the familiar categories of cultural products, practices and perspectives in an integrated way. Most significantly, this goal requires learners to not only gain cultural knowledge but also to develop their cultural competence skills to communicate in appropriate ways. The Cultures goal is intended to be used in an integrated fashion with the Communications goal since language and culture are inextricably linked.

The revised Communication goal continues to be organized around the three modes of communication: interpretive, interpersonal and presentational. These modes, purposefully appearing in this order, correspond to the way in which language learners typically process new information. Learners are first exposed to new information through authentic sources. They build their language proficiency by engaging in listening, reading or viewing comprehension activities, which enable them to form an initial understanding of what they hear, read or viewed. Next, the learners engage in interpersonal activities. By discussing, questioning and exchanging viewpoints, they expand their understanding of the new information along with their ability to use it in a communicative context. Finally, they present their expanded understanding of the new information to others through writing, speaking or signing. This performance-based framework provides language learners with real-world, culturally rich contexts for communication.

With its focus on building learners’ oral and literacy skills, the Communication goal is aligned with the literacy requirements contained in Ohio’s English language arts standards. During this most recent revision of the world language standards, continued attention was given to the English language arts literacy standards. The Communication goal clarifies the progression of literacy development across proficiency levels in specialized interpretive literacy, interpersonal literacy and presentational literacy sections. The Communication goal sets parallel expectations between learners’ literacy development in English and the development of their second language literacy skills.
ORGANIZATION OF THE STANDARDS

| Goals | Goals are the desired end results as learners build their cultural competence and language proficiency to:
|       | o Interact with intercultural competence using knowledge and understanding of native and other cultures;
|       | o Communicate effectively in languages other than English in person and via technology. |
| Benchmarks | Benchmarks are specific statements of what learners should know and be able to do interculturally and communicatively within:
|       | o The major proficiency levels of Novice, Intermediate and Advanced;
|       | o The modes of interpretive, interpersonal and presentational communication. |
| Standards | Standards are statements of the knowledge and skills that learners master to reach the corresponding benchmark. Standards deconstruct the benchmark proficiency levels into:
|       | o Novice Low through Advanced Low sublevels;
|       | o Culture, communication and literacy knowledge and skills;
|       | o Interpretive, interpersonal and presentational knowledge and skills. |
| Progress Indicators | Progress Indicators show what intercultural communication looks like in a classroom or real-life situation. The indicators in the standards:
|       | o Serve as concrete examples of how progress could be measured across each proficiency sublevel;
|       | o Include modern languages, classical languages, American Sign Language, and elementary, immersion and exploratory programs;
|       | o Can be used as written, can be elaborated upon or can be used as examples of how to create personalized progress indicators;
|       | o Can be modified or reordered by topic, while staying within the descriptors of each proficiency sublevel. |

STANDARDS OVERVIEW

Goals: Goals are the desired end results as learners build their cultural competence and language proficiency.

1. Cultures: Interact with intercultural competence using knowledge and understanding of native and other cultures.
   - Investigate, reflect on and explain the relationship between products, practices and perspectives.
   - Interact with others in and from other cultures.

2. Communication: Communicate effectively in languages other than English in person and via technology.
   - Interpretive: Identify, understand and analyze input that is heard, read or viewed on a variety of topics from authentic resources.
   - Interpersonal: Interact and negotiate meaning in spontaneous spoken, written or signed conversations to exchange and share information, reactions, feelings and opinions.
   - Presentational: Present information, concepts and viewpoints to inform, explain, persuade and narrate in spoken, written or signed language when negotiation of meaning is not possible.
Benchmarks, Standards and Modes of Communication: The Cultures and Communication goals are broken down as follows:

Benchmarks are specific statements of what learners should know and be able to do communicatively and culturally within each major level of proficiency: Novice, Intermediate and Advanced.

Standards, with a progression from Novice Low to Advanced Low, are statements of the knowledge and skills learners must master to reach the corresponding benchmark. Thus, the standards represent a deconstruction of the benchmarks. When mastered in a progressive sequence, with purposeful integration of previously taught concepts, the standards build learner proficiency and contribute to mastery of the benchmarks they support.

Interpretive Communication (Reading, Listening, Viewing)

Learners comprehend the main idea and relevant details in a variety of culturally authentic and age-appropriate oral, written or signed messages. They understand and interpret culturally authentic texts, both nonfictional and fictional, as well as overheard, observed or written conversations. Learners derive meaning using listening, viewing and reading strategies.

Interpersonal Communication (Listening and Speaking, Reading and Writing, Viewing and Signing)

Learners initiate and sustain spontaneous meaningful spoken, written or signed communication by providing and obtaining information, expressing feelings and emotions, and exchanging opinions in culturally appropriate ways. Learners actively negotiate meaning across languages and cultures to ensure their messages are understood and they can understand others.

Presentational Communication (Speaking, Writing, Signing)

Learners present information, concepts, ideas and viewpoints on a variety of topics to audiences of listeners, readers or viewers for varied purposes. Learners demonstrate linguistic and cultural competence through creative endeavors and artistic expression. Learners use their understanding of culture to convey messages in a manner that facilitates interpretation by others where no direct opportunity for the active negotiation of meaning exists.

Progress Indicators: Progress indicators are examples that show what the standards could look like during learner performance.

The progress indicators that follow each set of standards allow educators to see what performance looks like in a classroom or real-life situation and give concrete samples of how progress could be measured across each proficiency sublevel. The progress indicators are intended to be examples only and can be used as written, can be elaborated upon or can be used as examples of how to create personalized progress indicators. Educators have the freedom to modify or reorder the topics or create their own progress indicators aligned to the proficiency descriptions.

The alignment of Ohio’s world languages and cultures standards with the proficiency continuum has resulted in an appropriately rigorous set of expectations for K-12 language learners. Academic rigor is instilled in teaching, learning and assessment through standards that strengthen learners’ capacities to understand content that is complex, ambiguous, provocative and personally or emotionally challenging.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ABOUT THE STANDARDS

1. WHAT IS THE ROLE OF THE STANDARDS IN THE CLASSROOM? DO THEY TELL TEACHERS WHAT TO TEACH?

The standards define what all learners should know and be able to do. They do not include prescribed lists of resources or language-specific content nor do they tell what or how teachers should teach. For instance, the standards do not specify defined language structures and vocabulary words, but this is fundamental to standards expectations that learners be able to access authentic resources, interact with others and present and share information. Given the large number of languages offered in Ohio schools as well as the wide range of grade levels where learners begin their language studies, it would be challenging for the standards to enumerate all or even most of the content that learners should learn or in which grades it should be taught.

A well-developed, content-rich curriculum that is consistent with the expectations laid out in this document will complement these standards. The program should determine the appropriate sublevel for learners to reach by the end of each school year. The world language model curriculum has a recommended set of proficiency targets that take into account language, program type and hours of study. While not mandated by the state, these targets serve as a research-based starting point for schools to determine the appropriate end goals for their learners. Educators should be mindful that learners often master proficiency sublevels at different rates for each mode or skill. By providing a variety of learning opportunities and formative and summative assessments across all three modes of communication and four language skills, teachers and learners will gain insight into areas of strength and areas of focus.

2. WHEN SHOULD TEACHERS EXPECT LEARNERS TO MASTER EACH PROFICIENCY SUBLEVEL?

The standards define a cumulative progression designed to enable learners to meet Intermediate High/Advanced Low by the end of high school in a vertically aligned, well-articulated language program. Intermediate High is consistent with the level at which learners also can earn the Ohio Seal of Biliteracy. Given that programs across the state begin language study in different grade levels, every

3. HOW DO I USE THE STANDARDS FOR VERTICAL ALIGNMENT OF LANGUAGE COURSES?

Districts should use the standards to determine the final proficiency goals for their programs. This may vary among districts depending on the number of years of continuous language studies offered. Once the end goal of the program has been determined, the proficiency levels for the previous years will be backward aligned from highest to lowest. Research-based targets are provided, but they are not state-mandated.

The standards should be looked at as cumulative performance descriptors, in which each sublevel includes all the information from the previous sublevels. For example, the Novice Low and Mid Interpretive standards mention using visuals or gestures to increase comprehension when reading, viewing or listening. The use of visuals or gestures is not mentioned from Novice High through Advanced Low; however, it is understood that any skills mastered in previous sublevels will be subsumed and built upon in the following sublevels, even if not explicitly stated.

Resources related to vertical alignment and backward design can be found in the model curriculum.

4. DO THE STANDARDS INCLUDE MODIFICATIONS FOR DIVERSE LEARNERS?

It would be challenging for the standards to fully reflect the great variety in abilities, needs, learning rates and achievement levels of learners in any given classroom. All learners should have equal access to the knowledge and skills necessary in their post-high school lives. The standards do not define the intervention methods or materials to support learners who are below or above language-level expectations.

With the inclusion of proficiency levels as the basis of the standards, programs now have the means for the widest possible range of learners to participate fully from the outset. Using intentional pre-assessment to determine language learners’ abilities when they enter a course allows teachers to set appropriate target goals for each learner’s growth. For example, native or heritage speakers may have strong speaking and listening skills, but they may have weak reading and writing skills. Knowing this allows teachers to place learners in the appropriate level course and determine the skills to focus on to progress.

Resources for teaching diverse learners can be found in the model curriculum.

5. HOW DO AUTHENTIC MATERIALS, TEACHER-CREATED MATERIALS AND TEXTBOOKS FIT INTO THE STANDARDS?

The standards specify the progression and end goals of K-12 learners developing intercultural communicative competence and stronger literacy skills using authentic cultural materials and interactions. The standards do not define how teachers should teach nor the specific materials they should use. Teachers should incorporate a variety of materials and strategies that help learners achieve the end goals, but there is not one set methodology to accomplish this.

Textbooks, leveled readers and teacher-created materials are tools that can serve as a scaffold or bridge to the ultimate goal of learners accessing authentic materials and culture and to increasing communication and literacy skills.

Learners should be exposed to authentic media and texts beginning at Novice Low, regardless of the methodology, learning materials or instructional approach. Exposure to a variety of authentic language and cultural resources as early as possible is essential to developing intercultural communicative competence for all learners.

Resources related to teaching with authentic materials for various languages and incorporating literacy can be found in the model curriculum.

6. WHAT IS THE ROLE OF GRAMMAR, ESPECIALLY FOR CLASSICAL LANGUAGES?

The decision on how, when or if grammar is explicitly taught is addressed by educators and curriculum directors of individual language programs, consistent with meeting the expectations of the state standards. Given the large number of languages taught in Ohio, as well as district-determined scope and sequence for courses, it would be challenging for the standards to give specific grammar to teach at each level. Many best practice strategies for teaching grammar in context are available in the model curriculum.

For classical languages, reading and understanding written messages of the ancient world are key goals for learners. Explicit grammar learning may play an important role in comprehending and using the language of historical texts. As with other languages, the role of grammar should be determined by the teachers and curriculum directors of individual programs. Interpretive listening and presentational or interpersonal speaking and writing also can be important communicative elements in a well-balanced classical language program. The oral and written use of the language can be employed to build learner interest and heighten understanding of and appreciation for a classical language and its culture.

Resources for classical languages can be found in the model curriculum.
Ohio’s Learning Standards for World Languages and Cultures

Cultures Goal
Interact with intercultural competence using knowledge and understanding of native and other cultures.
- Investigate, reflect on and explain the relationship between products, practices and perspectives.
- Interact with others in and from other cultures.

Communication Goal
Communicate effectively in languages other than English in person and via technology.
- INTERPRETIVE: Identify, understand and analyze input that is heard, read or viewed on a variety of topics from authentic resources.
- INTERPERSONAL: Interact and negotiate meaning in spontaneous spoken, written or signed conversations to exchange and share information, reactions, feelings and opinions.
- PRESENTATIONAL: Present information, concepts and viewpoints to inform, explain, persuade and narrate in spoken, written or signed language when negotiation of meaning is not possible.
