ORBIS: The Stanford Geospatial Network Model of the Roman World reconstructs the time cost and financial expense associated with different types of travel in antiquity. The model is based on a simplified version of the giant network of cities, roads, rivers and sea lanes that framed movement across the Roman Empire. It broadly reflects conditions around 200 CE but also covers a few sites and roads created in late antiquity. Place names are in Latin.

Site shows routes between Roman cities of merit. The route listing is in Latin, and also shows the cities and their approximate size along the route. Most place names are modern on the map, but are in Latin on the itinerary.
